

Bringing a Quilt to Documentation Day

We are excited to see your quilt and learn its story. You may bring two quilts. When you arrive, please register at our welcome table. You will be interviewed about the quilt while it is being examined and photographed.

Please bring each quilt "as is"; it is not necessary to clean or make repairs. Bring notes with all the information you may have about the making of the quilt and the quiltmaker(s). We are interested in family photos, especially any photos showing the quilt or quiltmaker, and when and where the quilt was made. Was it created for a special occasion? Did it win a ribbon at the fair?

We would also like to learn about the life of the quiltmaker including: birth and death dates, maiden name, husband's name, and the religion or ethnic background of the quilter's family.

The story of a family quilt is recorded.

There is no charge to bring a quilt. If a duplicate copy of the documentation record is desired, a small donation is requested.

A cloth label with your quilt's registration number will be provided. Please make sure it is stitched to the back of the quilt. You will also want to keep photos and records to pass down the history of the quilt for your family. You will receive information about the care and safe storage of quilts.

A quilt is studied and measured on documentation day.

West Virginia Quilt Documentation Project hopes to encourage families to keep and enjoy their heirloom textiles. Owners will not be asked to donate or sell their quilts. It is not the purpose of documentation to estimate the value or provide an appraisal of quilts studied.

Preserving Your Quilt's Story

Documentation days are part of an ongoing effort to record West Virginia's quilt artistry and history. The photographs and data gathered will be recorded for future historians and researchers.

Records created will be stored in the archives managed by the West Virginia Division of Culture and History. The confidentiality of quilt owners will be protected; no one will contact you without your permission.

Photographs of your quilt and related information will be added to The Quilt Index, an online database for scholars and educators. The Quilt Index includes data on more than 80,000 quilts collected from documentation projects, museums, libraries, and private collections. To learn more, visit quiltindex.org.

Photographs capture the unique beauty of each quilt.
